Workshop Description:

This seminar will combine information and experiential learning to explore the benefits of recognition and reinforcement to shape wanted behavior at all ages.

Specific concepts to be covered include:
❖ The magic ratio, circle of security, and the parent-child relationship as a foundation for shaping wanted behavior.
❖ Focusing on wanted rather than unwanted behavior.
❖ Reinforcement schedules that support desired behavior.
❖ Addressing problem behaviors efficiently and effectively within a positive frame.

Objectives:
1. Learn to use recognition and reinforcement to support effective parenting.
2. Identify behavioral goals for children.
3. Find the benefits of focusing on wanted behaviors (rather than what we want to eliminate).
4. Build a cooperative relationship with your child(ren) to support wanted behaviors.
5. Address unwanted behaviors efficiently and effectively within a positive frame.

Cara and Jill formed Moving in Harmony to create opportunities for people to increase interpersonal connection and harmony, deepen joy and playfulness, boost wellbeing, be more present in all aspects of life, and revitalize their lives through movement and fun interaction.

Moving in Harmony is play, meditation, mindfulness, and skill building in a variety of packages. We tailor play groups for couples, families, children, and individuals of all ages and varying circumstances to experience more internal and interpersonal harmony.

Jill Hanson, LMFT, PsyD focuses her psychotherapy practice on trauma and attachment. Jill’s Trauma and Attachment Guide (TAG, Hanson, 2011) was created to help people recover from historic traumatic experiences that keep them stuck in the past by:

- Building skills to remain calm and in control;
- Making intentional choices to connect with healthy people in healthy ways;
- Working through painful events and memories that interfere with living well now;
- EMDR Therapy augments the trauma and attachment model

Jill also helps couples deepen trust and connection and assists divorcing parents to make effective parenting plans, prepare their children, and manage the process of separating and forming different households.

Cara Lattizori Nguyen, Psy.D. is a licensed Clinical Psychologist and has worked as a therapist since 1991. She has worked with children and families in varied settings (intensive in-home, hospitals, schools and outpatient.) She assists adults, children and adolescents who struggle with depression, anxiety, loss, severe mental illness, developmental challenges, parenting and divorce. Finally, she loves to work with families together to provide trust and resources to get unstuck from less adaptive attempts at health. Her training and experience with ADHD, autism, anxiety disorders, trauma, grief and loss, and working through the process of getting out of stuckness supports making change happen.
